

Part Three

A Commentary on the Approach

In the first two parts of this book I have illustrated and annotated ways in which people themselves can study at appropriate points work in which they are engaged and make better-informed decisions about what to do next and how to do it. The processes of analysis and design encompass past and present experience and future action: what has been done and what has now to be done. They are essentially activities in the workplace, not the laboratory, even when workers withdraw temporarily to do them—they are in vivo.